1		Parents should have the choice.. How are parents expected to take 2+ under 10s to sperate schools potentially opposite of town when they both start at 8.50am? Make them walk alone?	11/12/13 21:18	0.1	Submitted	web

2		I believe that it is important to ensure that siblings are kept at the same school. Not only is it disruptive for a parent / parents to ensure their children arrive and are collected from 2+ schools at the same time, but it can have significant impacts on the learning for these siblings if the teaching varies significantly from school to school.	13/12/13 16:17	0.1	Submitted	web
3		Why is there still no link between the infant and junior schools? The fact that older siblings attend the junior school should be taken into account in the admissions criteria. There is a reciprocal "point" from the junior school the child has attended the feeder school, thus acknowledging the very clear and obvious links between these two schools. They may have different heads and different governing organisations (one being C of E), but essentially 60 children move from the infant school to the junior school every year. They are on the same site and if a sibling is unable to get into the infant school but has siblings at the junior school, they should be treated as a "sibling". I have 3 children and the older 2 will be year 3 and year 4 when my youngest starts reception, thus she will not be a "sibling". With the increased birth years, additional new housing being built in the catchment and the distance we live from school, it is quite likely we will not gain a place at the school. This affects lots of other families at the school. It does seem that families get a raw deal in Ascot (albeit the infant school is an excellent school). Not only do we have 70 places at infant level and then only 60 at junior, so 10 children a year have to be unsettled every year, but we also have no "sibling" relationship between the schools. It doesn't seem that this would be a particularly difficult, nor controversial change to the criteria. It simply reflects the position of all "primary" schools and should be in place here.	09/01/14 12:45	0.1	Submitted	web

4		This is an excellent change and should definitely happen as it is impossible to have children at different schools to each other	27/01/14 16:18	0.2	Submitted	web
